

Kyle Bauer was recently at Scheel's sporting goods store in Eau Claire, Wi. When he left the store and was on his way to his car he saw a gentleman lying on his back in the parking lot. Kyle immediately ran up to help. Kyle found that the man was foaming out of his mouth and was unresponsive. Kyle first thought the man may have been choking and checked his air way but that was clear. When a lady came by Kyle had her call 911. At this time the man became responsive and Kyle covered him with blankets and sweatshirts and tried to keep him calm until paramedics arrived. Once the paramedics arrived they took the scene over he assisted with getting the man on the stretcher. This is a great example of doing what's right. Kyle could have easily looked the other way and went about his day but he took the time to help someone in need. Kyle was wearing his Ahern Impact sweatshirt at the time which represents the company well within the community.

Kyle is a 3rd year steamfitter apprentice who had taken CPR and First Aid last fall at his union hall. Thank you Kyle for acting and not being a bystander. Safety is truly a lifestyle not just something to think about while at work.
